Content

Career planning during the doctoral phase is tricky – focusing on research is highly demanding, planning what comes next in time is equally challenging. The rise of the seemingly ultimate question “Should I stay or should I go?” may trigger uncertainty about both one’s competencies and requirements for future steps.

This EUGLOH activity focuses 1) on transversal skills that PhD researchers gain throughout their journey and 2) on various ways in which science can have societal impact – by actors both inside and outside of universities. For this purpose, you will work on your individual competence profile, learn about research communication and explore sciencepreneurship.

The Erasmus+ Blended Intensive Program (BIP) takes place both virtually and physically. The virtual component provides innovative presentation tools and enables international PhDs to present their research projects. The physical part in Hamburg offers workshops with various experts to prepare PhDs for career paths in and beyond academia. You will identify and develop skills for making an impact – be it political, educational, cultural, economic, or social – in the field of global health.

Activities and Learning Objectives

- Train your pitch: Refine your presentation skills by 3MT presentations (HRA Research Communication Project in cooperation with U.Porto 3MT®)
- Build your competence profile: Reflect your skills and competences that you gain throughout your PhD (based on EU ResearchComp)
- Engage with publics: Learn to communicate your research to a wider audience (in cooperation with city2science)
- Reflect your skill set as a sciencepreneur: Discover what it means to become an innovator (in cooperation with YES – Young Entrepreneurs in Science @ Falling Walls Foundation)
